

Character-Based DISCIPLINE

"maintaining the dignity of each student while constantly working toward the long-term goal of self-directed, self-regulated, and responsible behavior"

Humans learn and process through social interactions. Our character behaviors are heavily influenced by our prior experiences with others. This session explores the neuroscience behind all human behavior, and unpacks the essential elements that students need to be their best selves. Regardless of the discipline program you use, this session will enhance your practice by increasing your understanding of proactive research-based implementation strategies for before, during, and after behavior challenges occur.
